ERROR IN BILL CAUSES MUCH WORK IN HOUSE

Large Part of Morning Session Taken Up Straightening Out Mistakes

Errors and changes in local bills took up a great part of Tuesday morning's session in the house and gave rise to the most peculiar parliamentary situations. One of these was the local bill introduced some time ago in the house about the office of the state auditor. The bill was referred to committee, reported favorably, passed after the third reading and transmitted to the senate. There it was read the first time, sent to committee, recommended for passage with an amendment and so adopted in the senate. It was then sent back to the house so that the amendment might be affirmed or rejected. The house agreed to the senate amendment and the bill was ready for the signatures of the speaker and clerk of the senate, the president and clerk of the house, and the governor of the state. In the meantime, however, interested parties from Sumter county held a conference with senator from that district and at their request he introduced a resolution asking the house to send back the bill to the senate. The house gave unanimous consent and the bill was sent back. The senate then passed a substitute which, instead of abolishing the office of the auditor, provided for the placement of the treasurer of Sumter county on a salary of $100 a year. This substitute bill was sent back to the house. When the substitute came up Tuesday Speaker Burwell declared it one of the most unique things he had ever seen. He said the action of the house in sending the bill back to the senate after agreeing to the senate amendment was out of order; but as the point was not raised at the time and the house gave unanimous consent, he didn't want to take the responsibility for unravelling the mess and he would leave it up to the house.

The house then passed a motion refusing to recognize the senate substitute and directing the clerk to transmit the bill as originally passed with its amendment, to the governor. Soon after this matter was disposed of a similar point came up. The local bill incorporating the town of Oakhurst in Hall county had been passed in the house, passed in the senate and sent back to the house to be amended. Representative Roberts, of Hall, discovered a clerical error by the stenographer in drafting the bill from the original. The error involved the tax rate which the town was authorized to levy. So Mr. Roberts asked unanimous consent to send the bill back to the senate for correction.

But the speaker, in view of the Sumter county affair—which had just been decided—declined that the house had authority to send the bill back to the senate after it had gone through the regular process of becoming a law.

MODIFIED SUFFRAGE BILL IS KILLED IN COMMITTEE

Measure Would Have Given Ballot to Women in Cities and Towns

The constitutional amendments committee of the senate, of which Senator Smith of the Thirty-fourth is chairman, meeting Monday afternoon, recommended that a modified suffrage bill be passed. This kills the last vestige of suffrage legislation introduced at this session.

This bill, introduced by request of suffragists by Senators Dineen of the Thirty-fifth, Ward of the Fifth, and Buchanan of the Ninth, does not provide that all Georgia women shall vote, but that only women living in Georgia cities and towns shall have ballot rights. They shall be allowed to vote in all elections, general or otherwise, the bill provides, and not merely in the municipal elections.

Several senators said they have heard of another bill already prepared by the suffragists to allow none but the country women to vote, thus eliminating their city sisters. This bill has not been introduced in the senate.

Resolutions Praising President Wilson's Course Adopted by Union

(By Associated Press.)
LOS ANGELES, Aug. 10.—Resolutions urging the warring European nations to conclude an honorable and lasting peace and praising President Wilson's course in handling foreign complications were adopted today by the convention of the International Typographical union.

Gross earnings of members of the union during the year ending May 21, 1915, were said to be $61,155,285, an increase of $104,438 over 1914.

PHARMACISTS HOLDING MEET IN SAN FRANCISCO
(By Associated Press.)
SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 10.—Among important resolutions expected to be voted on today at the convention here of the American Pharmaceutical association was one which, if adopted, would prevent any person from becoming a member of the association, unless he was a graduate of a recognized college of pharmacy.

Should this resolution become part of the by-laws of the organization it was stated an effort would be made to amend it by barring from practice any ineligible member, even though he had passed the state board of pharmacy's examination.

Wells-Fargo Lost $200,000 By Thieves Trio

Three Men Held Accused of Systematic Thiefs Covering Twelve Years—Had a Smooth Scheme

CHICAGO, Aug. 10.—With three men under arrest here today, one of whom was said to be confessed and desperate, the Wells-Fargo Express company, claim to have uncovered a system of thievery through which thousands of dollars of merchandise totaling nearly $200,000 within the last 12 years. The trio, who are alleged to have disposed of the stolen goods; Benjamin Watkins, a member of the express company, and a man known to the police only as the "mysterious man" who is said to have traveled under many names as aliases.

Watkins was employed by the United States Express company, which was absorbed by the Wells-Fargo more than a year ago. He was promoted to that time, detectives said the United States company had been losing an average of $200,000 worth of goods a month. Watkins remained in the service when the United States company was absorbed.

Packages containing valuables would be wrapped in one large parcel by Watkins. It was charged and addressed to the "mysterious man" at some suburb of Chicago where it would be claimed by him under the alias which happened to be on the list.

RECALL COMMITTEE OF ONE HUNDRED IS NAMED
Names Will Not Be Announced for Time, Says Dr. Broughton

Dr. Joe Broughton, who presided at the auditorium mass meeting, which adopted resolutions urging the recall of Mayor Woodward and six other members of the board of police commissioners, stated Tuesday that the committee of one hundred to be named, but will not be announced for some time.

The executive committee held a meeting Monday night at which a subcommittee was named to secure a downer on the board of police commissioners, and this site will be selected during the day Tuesday. Dr. Broughton expected to be on the job there by Wednesday.

No doubt he has been made of the number of signatures already secured to the seven recall petitions, which were distributed and later by enthusiasts, who were there. Dr. Broughton explained Tuesday that his remarks relative to the possible publication of the list of signers of the recall petitions referred to the period of time that the petitions remain in the hands of the committee, which is collecting them.

The list will not be published while we have it," said Dr. Broughton, "but, of course, after we have the required number of signatures and the petitions are formally filed with the city clerk, we do not care whether they are published or not."

Several members of council say that they will urge the passage of a council resolution to publish the petitions after they are filed with the city clerk, and it cannot be said that the resolution friends of the seven officials say that they will see that the petition is published.

R. A. Broyles Answers Card of Capt. English
To the Editor of The Journal: Police Commissioner James W. English may say claim to have performed a meritorious part in the removal of a brave, efficient and Christian police chief, but I apprehend he will find it a much more difficult task to get the people of this state or city to disbelieve the following affidavit from ex-Chief James L. Beavers.

R. A. BROYLES, Georgia, Fulton County.

In person appeared before the undersigned, James L. Beavers, who upon oath, says:

That in the year 1912, about thirty days before I closed the night district, Captain J. W. English called me over the phone and asked me if I was very busy. I answered "Not specially so," and he said "If I could come to his office about 2 o'clock. I answered that I could. He said that he wanted to have a talk with me. I went to his office at the appointed time. He had no idea what he wanted to talk about. He first asked how the board treating me. I told him all right. He replied by saying "We had too many on the board," and that it was hard to please so many.

He then brought up the subject of the agitation going on at that time about the recall of the police chief. The investigations that he had made in other cities and that these places were necessary and that these cranks, like J. K. Orr, knew nothing about running a city. He then told me of his experience that he had with the gamblers when he was mayor, and how he forced the chief of police at that time to resign, and how he elected Arthur Connolly as chief of police and finished his conversation by saying: "But this city is a larger city now than it was then and man that undertake to clean up this city, I testified to this before the grand jury last year and the public will remember that I said this same thing in substance about a year ago in answer to some of Mayor Woodward's criticism of me through the press, when I made this statement that a prominent business man of this city, who was very close to the mayor had told me this same thing," but this name was not published at the time.

Sworn to and subscribed before me, this August 9th, 1915.

ENGLAND HAS 5,000,000 MEN READY FOR WAR?

Atlanta Woman, Just Home, Says Allies Are Confident of Victory

England has five millions of men ready to send to the front, according to Mrs. Ruth Sanderson, former Atlanta police matron and for fifteen years a resident of this city, who has just returned to America after visiting relatives in Isle of Man, Manchester, Lancashire and other parts of England. Miss Sanderson is at the Aragon hotel and will be in Atlanta for some time. She left here last winter, making the crossing from New York to Liverpool on the Lusitania, which was sunk two trips later. She returned a month ago for several weeks was in Boston. "All England is confident that the allies will win the war," she said Tuesday, "and they think victory will come soon. The country is just one blaze of patriotism. Twenty thousand men enlisted in Manchester shortly before I left and every call brings more recruits than the authorities can take care of. The women, too, are doing all they can for their country by doing the men's work at home. Women enlist! They don't have to. England has enough men."

Good Roads Boosters
(Special Dispatch to The Journal.)
COLUMBUS, Ga., Aug. 10.—Headed by President John T. Davis, of the Columbus chamber of commerce, a large party of automobile left Columbus early today for Fort Gaines, going in the interest of good roads and trade extensions.

Among the party was a number of prominent wholesalers, who plan through the trade body to get better acquainted with their patrons and extend business in this way.

PROTEST MADE AGAINST TAX EQUALIZATION LAW

Public Service Corporation
Favored Under Statute,
Charge of Senators

Maintaining that the tax equalization law is unjust and places an unequal burden on the people, as shown by the increase of the taxable values for 1914 has been on property on the tax digest before then, and by the fact that the "people's property" has increased 11 per cent in value and the property of public service corporations only between 2 and 4 per cent, twenty-five senators, a majority of the senate, Tuesday entered in the senate journal a signed protest against the law.

The protest drawn and signed by Senator W. J. Eakes, of the 27th district, reads:

Whereas, The senate has heretofore voted against the repeat of the act of August, 1912, commonly known as the tax equalization law, and

Whereas, Under the rules of the senate, no new bill can now originate from any body to repeal said law, and

Whereas, We have entertained a hope that said act could be amended in some reasonable way so as to reach the classes of property for taxation, and

Whereas, There has been no equalization as between counties of this state, and

Whereas, More than 90 per cent of the increase in taxable values for the year 1914 has been on property heretofore on the tax digest, which means simply increasing the tax on property already returned, and

Whereas, The increase of values of the property on the digest "the people's property," has been about 11 per cent, and the increase of the public service corporations' property has been between 2 and 4 per cent—these facts being shown by the report of the comptroller general, 1914:

Therefore, The undersigned, here-with enter our solemn protest against the injustice and unequal burden now

BAGGAGE AND TICKET RULE KNOCKED OUT

Commerce Commission Holds Proposed Regulation Shall Not Be Enforced

(By Associated Press.)
WASHINGTON, Aug. 10.—Proposed rules of certain railroads, which would have prohibited the through checking of baggage and sale of through parlor or sleeping car tickets on combination tickets used in connection with joint fares from junction points, were abrogated in a decision today by the interstate commerce commission.

For years travelers from New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore and other trunk line territory going to points in the south and southeast have checked baggage through to destination and have obtained through pullman car accommodations on combination of tickets good only to and from the gateways to southern and southeastern territory. Then Pennsylvania and Baltimore and Ohio railroads proposed to abolish the practice, for protection of their joint fares, and conserve their revenues. The rules were to apply to combinations of all forms of tickets issued by the roads and their southern connections, to and from the gateways involved, but mostly were to apply to combinations involving the use of mileage books of southern railroads or southern passenger association interchange which effect lower fares than the published joint through rates.

The railroads contended the real purpose was to force the use of their own tickets. The railroad industry is now in a state of confusion. The railroad industry is now in a state of confusion.

No Appetite, Ached All Over, Nervous, Sick Stomach.

Augusta, Ga.—"Doctor Pierce's Favorite Prescription proved so helpful and beneficial in my past case of ill health that I am glad to say a good word for it, hoping that some other woman may be induced to give this medicine an opportunity to help her. I was in a delicate condition and suffered from many discomforts. Had no appetite; ached all over; had no strength to work; was constipated; had indigestion; was extremely nervous; sick at stomach; and upon retiring would lie awake until 12 or 1 o'clock. Another discomfort was the swelling of left limb and foot. In conclusion would add that my kidneys also were disturbed. The relief given by the 'Favorite Prescription' could not have been more satisfactory."—MRS. ANNE COOPER, 632 Marbury, St. Augusta, Ga.

If you are a sufferer, if your daughter, mother, sister need help, get Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription in liquid or tablet form from any medicine dealer to-day. Then address Doctor Pierce, Invalids' Hotel, Buffalo, N. Y., and get confidential medical advice entirely free, or a book on woman's diseases or "Mother and Baby" sent free.

Doctor Pierce's Pills are unequaled as a Liver Pill. Smallest, easiest to take. One tiny Sugar-coated Pellet at a Dose. Cure Sick Headache, Biliousness, Constipation, Indigestion, Biliary Attacks, and all derangements of the Liver, Stomach and bowels.

The most valuable book for both men and women is Doctor Pierce's Common Sense Medical Advice. A splendid 100-page volume, with engravings and colored plates. TRY IT! SUBSTITUTE FOR NASTY CALOMEL

Starts your liver without making you sick and can not salivate

Every druggist in town—your druggist and everybody's druggist—has noticed a great falling-off in the sale of Calomel. They all give the same reason. Ligon's Liver Tonic is taking its place. "Calomel is dangerous and people know it, while Ligon's Liver Tonic is perfectly safe and gives better results," said a prominent local druggist. Ligon's Liver Tonic is personally guaranteed by every druggist who sells it. A large bottle costs 50 cents, and it fails to give easy relief in every case of liver sluggishness and constipation. It doesn't gripe or cause inconvenience all the next day like violent calomel. Take a dose of calomel today and tomorrow you will feel weak, sick and nauseated. Don't lose a day's work! Take Ligon's 24-Hour Liver Tonic instead and feel full of vigor and ambition.—(Advt.)

If You are troubled with heartburn, gases and a distressed feeling after eating take a Renall Dyspepsia Tablet before and after each meal and you will obtain prompt relief. Sold only by us. 25c. ELKIN DRUG CO.

Quickly and Surely Conquers Constipation

Don't let constipation poison your blood and curtail your energy. If your liver and bowels don't work properly get a box of Carter's Little Liver Pills to-day and your trouble will cease.

For dizziness, lack of appetite, headache and blotchy skin nothing can equal them. Purely vegetable.

APPROPRIATIONS BILL IS NOW READY FOR SENATE

Committee Takes Final Action on 1916-17 Budget Monday Night

With the exception of $14,000 increase in the appropriation for the Confederate Soldiers' home, $3,000 for hog cholera serum, and a $25,000 increase for the military department, the senate appropriations committee, at meeting Monday night at the Kimball house, recommended for passage the 1916-17 appropriations as passed by the house appropriations committee, an increase of $49,000 over the appropriation as passed last week by the house.

The house cut the University of Georgia appropriation from $18,500 to $16,000; the senate committee placed the appropriation at $16,000, the amount recommended by the house committee.

The appropriations, as recommended by the senate committee amount to approximately $4,000,000, which Chairman John D. Walker said was less than the 1914-15 appropriations, and which he said ought not to necessitate an increase in the tax rate unless tax returns have decreased.

Representative Fulbright, of Burke, chairman of the house appropriations committee, was present at the meeting.

PERSONS AT MEETING. President Persons, at the close of the meeting, he thought the appropriations would be passed up in the final form by the house and the senate Wednesday morning, and the appropriations are expected to go through at once as recommended by the committee.

They will be immediately transmitted to the house. If the house does not concur in the appropriations as passed by the senate, there will nevertheless not be much time lost in debate, as a conference committee of the house and senate will be appointed, and will meet and adjust the appropriations to meet the demands of both the house and senate. This committee will report its findings to both houses, probably Wednesday night, and it is expected the appropriations bill, in this final form, will then be passed by both houses, thus eliminating any possibility of an extra session, so far as the appropriations bill is concerned.

Although the senate committee did not recommend a $14,000 increase for the Soldiers' home, it allowed an increase of $4,000, raising the appropriation from $36,000 to $40,000. The hog serum appropriation was cut because the committee thought this serum could be bought more cheaply than it could be manufactured by the state.

Although the $25,000 increase for the military was allowed, an increase of $15,000 was allowed, making the appropriation $40,000 instead of $25,000 as at present.

The public school fund was set at $2,600,000, which is $50,000 less than the amount passed by the house.

ATHENS SUMMER SCHOOL. The senate committee gave the Athens summer school an increase of $2,500 yearly.

The tuberculosis sanitarium at Alto was given $20,000 instead of the $20,000 passed by the house.

The house gave the prison department $80,000; the senate committee recommended $100,000, an increase of $5,000 over the present appropriation.

The house allowed the Athens State Normal school $17,500; the senate committee recommended $17,500, the amount the school is now getting.

The senate committee had to work under extra pressure to get its report finished Monday night. The appropriations came over from the house this year about ten days late, and Chairman Walker and his committee have been congratulated for the way in which they accomplished the mass of work before them in such a short time.

It was imperative that the committee have its report ready by Tuesday morning, as the appropriations bill came up for second reading in the senate then.

ATLANTA CREDIT MEN TO HOLD MEETING TONIGHT

Attorney General Walker Will Deliver Principal Address at East Lake Club

AMAZING RECORD ON HOME GROUNDS

What 143 People Among Thousands Did at Houston, Texas, Carnival

People of Houston, Texas, have given their approval of Vitalitas in a way to attract nation wide attention. Few products have ever received such a stamp of indorsement at home. In fact the approval extends throughout the state of Texas, but it is at Houston that Vitalitas is perhaps best known, for that city may be termed the home of this wonderful product. The laboratories that extract Vitalitas are here located.

What home people think of Vitalitas was indicated at the recent Deep Water carnival held at Houston, celebrating the opening of the new Government Ship Channel. A public Vitalitas demonstration was conducted throughout the carnival. Thousands visited it and paused amidst the bustle to tell how Vitalitas had restored them to health or of friends who had been saved by it. There were 143 who stopped long enough to each give a written testimonial. Many of these recite truly marvelous cures. Some of these statements have been published—others will be. They are particularly prized because they are spoken from the hearts of home people and spoken for the benefit of sick people everywhere.

Vitalitas is Nature's greatest curative for ills of stomach, liver, kidneys, bowels and blood.

See the display and sample Vitalitas at Jacobs' Pharmacy, 23 Whitehall street or write there for information.—(Advt.)

(Copyright, 1915, by W. W. Weller.)

It was a dull day at the seaside resort. In the first place, the weather was gray. In the second place, it was Wednesday, that wretched period between week ends. In the third place, Miss Harmon's boarders were all a little likewise toward each other, having talked and rocked together until there were no surprises left among them. It is needless to say that they were all women. The men only came out from the city Saturdays.

There was Mrs. Ingram, who crocheted like mad all the time and seemed never to finish anything; Miss Powell, who embroidered; Mrs. Adams, who merely gazed at the sea and yawned; Mrs. Gibbs, who played with her little dog and got things all crumby by giving the frequent lurches of crochets; three or four others, whose chief business in life seemed to be to sit in porch chairs, and Miss Stafford, who read constantly when she was not walking.

Every woman at Miss Harmon's displayed Miss Stafford without any better reason than that she was always among them and yet never of them. She was a teacher in the city, and had come to rest and read and enjoy herself in her own quiet way. She did not know how to play bridge or embroider or crochet, and did not care to learn, and she had a way of keeping to herself which the most prying spirit could not overcome. If she had placarded herself boldly with the legend, "I have no secrets and I don't care about yours," she could not have been more provoking.

In consequence, on this dull afternoon, Miss Harmon's sea-viewing porch bore two groups. Miss Stafford made one and the rest of the women made the other. Miss Stafford was reading. She had been walking all morning and had not dressed for luncheon. She had on a shabby gray sweater and her damaged flat beveled walking boots. Her dark, graying hair was mousy with the wind, and her skin showed a woeful want of powder. Yet she looked reposeful and contented, and not unpleasantly in contrast with the better groomed, better dressed women at the other end of the porch.

Nobody was saying a word when a cab rolled down the street and stopped before the door. Out stepped a man. And such a man! Larra, gray, fresh colored, beautifully cut, and with an air even when he felt the cabman that every woman began to straighten and green herself. But before he could more than life his hat and glance about him the door opened and Miss Harmon gathered him in.

Miss Harmon was old and dry and viaged like one of her own native rocks, but she had that ability to run a boarding house successfully which comes of consummate tact, understanding, and vast experience. Half an hour later she brought out her new guest and introduced him all around, beginning with Mrs. Robertson, who was the dowager of the group, and ending, of course, with isolated little Miss Stafford. Miss Stafford lifted her shrewd eyes from an absorbing page and encountered the gentleman's. She bowed, so did he. Then she returned to her book and he sat down by Miss Powell.

Miss Powell was handsome and frivolous and dying to get married. For eleven years she had summered, first at one resort and then, another in hopes of meeting her fate, but thus far her fate had eluded her. Now, when she saw Mr. Everett, she hoped anew. He was so handsome, so polished, so elegant. Of course she knew that she felt no fear. She had in her room upstairs three perfectly fresh dresses and she had been holding back in case of an emergency. The emergency had arrived. She felt prepared and at ease.

That night dinner was worth while. Everybody dressed for it. Miss Powell made a notable appearance. She sat at one side of Mr. Everett and did her utmost to enchant him. Mrs. Gibbs sat at the other side and did her best. Mrs. Adams sat just opposite and did her best. Even old Mrs. Robertson became quite lively. Certainly Mr. Everett was charming. He was so frank, so kind, so sympathetic, so entertaining. He was very tired he said, and had come for a few days' change and rest, having left his business in competent hands. He was sure he could not have chosen a more delightful spot. Mrs. Gibbs played bridge. Later, when it became incumbent upon him to select a partner, he gave the preference of his choice to old Mrs. Robertson.

Miss Stafford went to her room and spent the evening, which had not been her custom. All the other women felt mildly exultant. The school teacher no longer kept herself out of the way, but was thrust out. Her "companion" had arrived in the form of Mr. Everett.

A walking party was arranged for the next morning and Miss Stafford was not asked. It was evident that Mr. Everett did not care for her society, and he should not, gentle and courteous as he was, have to sit in the company of Miss Stafford. She was a little old, and she was a little queer, and she was a little queer.

to Mr. Everett. "Any woman who has taught school as long as she gets into ways. I suppose she isn't to blame, poor thing!"

"Certainly not," replied Mr. Everett kindly. He sighed as if in pity of all femininity which was not Miss Powell's. "That afternoon the sea was like crinkled satin. Miss Powell and Mrs. Gibbs were radiantly happy. The latter had no care save to appear adorable in Mr. Everett's eyes, having left Zip at home with Miss Harmon. Mrs. Robertson was happy, too. She almost forgot in the presence of this captivating stranger that she was sixty-five, that her hair and teeth were not her own and asleep, and waking made glowing plans for the future.

Dismay, however, waited on the morrow. Mr. Everett was gone. He had left good-bys for them all and had expressed regret at going, but he had been in such haste that he could not wait for breakfast. No, Miss Harmon did not think there had been any telegram, or any letter; he had simply gone because he felt like it.

A depressed group gathered at breakfast. Miss Powell could not eat. Mrs. Gibbs sniffed poor Zip until he squeaked for mercy. Only Miss Stafford appeared undisturbed. And because she had been invested with no heartache by friend in Averill. Miss Harmon, eased for a moment from boarding house cares, had come out and sat down among them.

"Averill!" exclaimed Miss Powell. "Averill? Yes, he was. She's going to visit his wife."

"His wife?" Somebody must have said it, though nobody was aware of doing so.

There was a moment's awful silence and then Mrs. Gibbs said, with a perky little laugh: "Who'd ever dreamed he was married?"

Miss Harmon looked grim. "If you'd asked Miss Stafford she could have told you, even if he did not. She and his wife were schoolmates. Of course, but she's going there now."

Mrs. Gibbs gazed. "Wouldn't it be funny if she told his wife how he capered down here with us?" she said.

Miss Harmon smiled. "She wouldn't! She isn't that kind. I know Miss Stafford. She's boarded a car with many sons with me. She isn't that kind. She's honor all through. Miss Stafford is."

The rest said nothing. They were trying very hard not to see each other and stare at the sea.

Now for a clear right of way for the W. and A. bills.

Apparently the Germans have no Napoleonic superstitions about following the Russians.

Restore These Appropriations.

The Senate can render no better service at this juncture than by restoring the appropriations for the Georgia Tech and the University to the amounts which the House committee recommended. Otherwise, these institutions which mean so much to the up-building of the Commonwealth will be grievously handicapped and a vital public interest will be imperiled. The Senate committee is warmly to be commended for its wise move to correct this error.

The House committee on appropriations allotted Tech one hundred thousand dollars a year for the 1916-17 period, that sum including ten thousand dollars for the maintenance and operation of the new power plant which generous friends of the school have donated without a penny's cost to the State. The House not only refused to grant the modest increase recommended but actually reduced the appropriation ten thousand dollars below that which Tech now receives. In like manner, the University's appropriation was cut from sixty thousand to fifty thousand dollars, which is less than its present pitance.

These slashes at the State's educational service do not mean economy; they mean starvation and decline. They mean narrowed opportunity to Georgia boys and discouragement to Georgia progress. Every sober thought and every patriotic pulse in the Legislature should leap to the undoing of this grave mistake.

The sums recommended by the House committee are the least at all commensurate with the urgent needs of Tech and of the University. The State cannot afford to be put in the attitude, much less in the practice, of forsaking the institutions which embody its noblest ideals and perform its highest mission. In justice to the people, the Legislature cannot afford to stint and starve institutions which continually are advancing the people's common welfare.

The Senate should restore these appropriations to the original figure, and should insist to the last hour and the last minute of the present session that they be kept there.

Incidentally General Scott is something of a diplomat.

If the war continues long enough, the Balkans will gain considerable territory to be larger than the actual borders.

Promises to Poland.

The Russian Premier now repeats with the Duma's endorsement the promise, made by the Grand Duke Nicholas at the beginning of the war and subsequently confirmed by the Czar himself, that Poland shall be granted the rights of home rule. The Poles probably regard with some cynicism these fair offers wrung from their ruler's adversity, but there is no indication of them going over to the Teutonic invader. Months ago Germany sought to incite them to rebellion by all manner of flattering appeals, but without success. They reasoned, no doubt, that though they had suffered much under Russia, their brethren in Posen had suffered more under Germany. They saw no advantage in fleeing a harsh master merely to find a savage one.

Since its shameful partition among three covetous Powers, every part of Poland has fared ill in the way of liberty, though that governed by Austria has been most fortunate. If the Poland of Russia has been stripped of its old glory and freedom, that of Germany has been crushed outright. "Prussia," it has been truly said, "has treated the Poles with utter mediocrity." It has outlawed their language and schools and institutions, and has spent millions of money in ousting them from their lands, through forced sales, in order to root Russian colonists. Little wonder, then, that Poland has not been enthusiastic over German appeals.

Of the competing promises, those of Russia appear the more convincing. Whatever the outcome of the present war, Russian absolutism must yield, and rather naturally will yield, to a more liberal order; whereas if German absolutism is victorious, its sabre will rattle louder than ever, and cut sharper. Meanwhile the plight of Poland is more grievous than that of any of the lands which the war has torn, not even Belgium excepted. Poland has been overruled not once but time and again by German and Austrian and Russian troops alike. Its fields are stark, its people desolate. If there is any justice in history, this land of broken hopes and splendid memories will be restored some day to freedom.

With the Germans driving the Russians, it is a case of centimeters after centimeters.

If Carranza can't pacify Mexico, he should not stand in the way of outsiders who can.

Weather man or no weather man, it has been proved that if it rains on the first of the dog days, rain may be expected on all of them.

Curmudgeonly Carranza.

The withdrawal of the Brazilian minister from Mexico, apparently upon threats of expulsion by Carranza, marks a crucial development in the problem with which Pan-American diplomacy now is ingressed. The testy chieftain of the so-called Constitutionalists becomes more and more intransigent. Having offended the Government of Guatemala by handing its minister his passports without due reason or explanation, Carranza next turned his choleric against Brazil; and it will not be surprising if he is soon in open duce with every other republic in the hemisphere. The departure of the Brazilian minister leaves the United States without any diplomatic representative at Mexico City, he having served our Government in that capacity since the break with the Huerta regime. It is thus more than ever imperative that positive steps for restoring order in Mexico be taken.

From the outset, Carranza has played the part of an arrogant dictator. In the revolution against Huerta, he tarried in the rear issuing pompous manifestoes, while Villa was bearing the brunt of battle and winning the important victories. It was to Carranza's curmudgeonly attitude more, perhaps, than to any other one circumstance that the failure to establish peace after Huerta's flight was ascribable. He has split the Constitutional ranks with his petty jealousies and vanities. He has proved himself incapable of regaling his country and is childishly unwilling that others should have a chance.

If Carranza imagines that any attempted government in Mexico can survive without the recognition of the United States and other representative American republics, he will soon awake to his folly. He may make the task of Pan-American diplomacy more difficult, but he cannot stay its purpose or prevent its accomplishment.

There ought to be no lack of employment for the old-time soldier of fortune.

Those European governments which are making charges against each other should enforce them.

The old-fashioned farmer who brought his bale of cotton to town and returned home with a bale of wheat now has no room in an automobile.

On the Western Front.

"With both sides in trenches elaborate enough to be called fortresses, and with both provided with heavy artillery trained ready to fire on every square yard in the narrow space between the two lines, battles and victories of the old-fashioned sort have been practically impossible. Aeroplanes and searchlights have almost put an end to the hope of surprising the enemy, and every charge on the trench is a truly desperate venture for the men who make it."

These circumstances, thinks a writer in the New York Times, go far toward explaining the failure of the Allies to make a more vigorous and effectual attack on the German lines in the west. One of Joffre's uppermost thoughts has been to conserve his troops, for France has no men to waste, and the British force on the Flanders front has been relatively small. Furthermore, until very recently at least, the Allies have been handicapped by a shortage of ammunition. These facts may account for the delay in the impatiently expected drive against the Germans.

It should be noted, however, that attacks have been made, frequently and fiercely and sometimes with appreciable if not decisive results. That neither the French nor British have been idle is attested grimly enough by their casualty lists during the last two months, and also by the German losses. An Associated Press dispatch from Paris, based upon undisclosed but "unquestionable" authority, to use the correspondent's phrase, asserts that the Allies "have accounted for two million Germans killed, wounded or demoralized." The same interview adds that the policy of the Allies in that quarter has been one of "attrition," their hope being that under the tremendous and unceasing strain the German forces will weaken and waver.

Soon or late, it would seem, one side or the other must attempt a decisive stroke in the west; and the rumor that Italy is preparing to send more than half a million fresh troops to France may presage such a movement.

Many a war souvenir will be shipped from New England factories to Europe for the use of museums when the war is over.

The theory that Noah caused the fall of man is a bit faulty in that the learned professor who dug up an old tablet failed to find a woman in the case.

Editorial Echoes

A Bolivian (Miss) man asks a pension for service in the Mexican war. He adds humorously the information that he fought with the British troops against Andrew Jackson in 1815. He admits being 120 years old.—Albany (Ga.) Herald.

Those little beads that glisten on the grass in morning puzzled wise men for many hundreds of years before they found out just what they meant. The lesson they learned was an important one for it taught them that there is a great deal of moisture in the air which cools the sun's rays and keeps them from burning us. At night when the earth passes out of the sunlight it lets out the heat stored during the day and the moisture in the air causes it to show slowly. This moisture drinks in the heat rays let off by the earth and it becomes warmer than the earth or the grass or flowers from which the heat is drawn.

The grass and flowers become cold after they let off their heat and the moisture near them chills. It turns to rain water and drops to the ground like rain; the grass and flowers catch these particles, and the water trying to keep itself together as much as it can gathers into tiny beads. These are dew drops.

Joy Beautifies the Face

PEOPLE cannot be too often reminded that one of the surest methods of destroying good looks is to persist for any length of time in discontent, envy, hatred, or any similar degrading emotional state.

And, on the other hand, one of the surest beautifiers is the cultivation of a contented, serene, joyous frame of mind.

Joy affects the face beneficially in many ways. Every feature is improved by it.

The truth of this was long ago pointed out by no less an authority than the great naturalist, Charles Darwin.

Under the influence of joy, Darwin noted, the circulation of the blood becomes more rapid. Consequently, skin clearness and color, and the good circulation, the skin takes on a healthier look.

Also the eyes become brighter, the entire expression more animated.

"A man in this state," Darwin rightly declared, "holds his body erect, his head upright, and his eyes open."

"There is no drooping of the features, and no contraction of the eyebrows."

"On the contrary the frontal muscle tends to contract slightly. This smooths the brow, removes every trace of a frown, arches the eyebrows a little, and raises the eyelids. The whole face expands."

Since Darwin's day scientific investigation of the effects of various emotions and bodily processes, has brought to light additional reasons for prescribing joy as a beautifier.

Good cheer, it is said, and, it appears, every bodily process is healthily stimulated by joy.

The joyous man breathes more fully than the discontented or morose one. He digests his food more easily and more effectively. He has less trouble in eliminating his waste products.

This smoothness in respiration, digestion, and elimination means that he is pretty sure to be well-nourished.

Which in its turn means that, so far as his face is concerned, he is not likely to suffer from pallor or sallowness, abnormal leanness, and general loss of muscular tonicity.

These are the facial defects common to the discontented man. The latter cannot well avoid them because of the physical effects of his always excited, by discontent on the mechanism for breathing, digestion, and eliminating.

Hence those who would retain their good looks as long as possible, or would improve a faulty facial appearance, should make every effort to overcome discontent and to develop and maintain a hopeful, contented, happy outlook on life.

It may be true, as the old proverb has it, that all the joy in the world cannot take one gray hair out of our heads.

But joy can and does remove wrinkles, brighten the eye, clear the complexion, and put flesh on the bones.

Remember this, all you who are anxious about your looks.

Ceasing being anxious about them, banish worry entirely, cultivate joy, and soon an astonishing improvement in the appearance of your features will become manifest.

Travelette

BY NIKKAR

NO. 281—MACAO.

This town, on an island in the mouth of the Canton river, and at the very threshold of the Chinese empire, belongs to Portugal, and yields that nation a handsome revenue in gambling licenses. For Macao is the Monte Carlo of the Orient, and the home of the Chinese gamblers.

Gambling, moreover, is the only live industry the town supports. There are not more than ten thousand inhabitants, most of whom are Chinese. There is some fishing in the bay by the clumsy Chinese methods, which are more picturesque than effective.

Seen across the water, from the quay, or Pajá Grande, which juts out into the bay, the town looks attractive, with its white walls and abundant foliage. Upon closer inspection, however, it is discovered to be rather badly built. The population presents strange contrasts, Chinese ladies of high degree, dressed in silk pajamas, rubbing elbows with pompous Portuguese in uniform, and khaki clad Britishers from Hongkong.

The gambling houses, of which there are a score, are in the Chinese section. They are one-story buildings, and the gambling rooms are ill-lit and ill-ventilated. Nevertheless, they are crowded with Chinese, Portuguese, British and a sprinkling of other nationalities. Most of the players gather around the table, but the aristocratic Chinese—Mandarins, and others of high rank—sit in the balconies, unseen by the crowd, and send down the sums which they wish to bet in small red baskets.

Fan tan is the most primitive and simple of gambling games. In the center of the table is a square of zinc, the sides being marked 1, 2, 3 and 4. The players place their bets upon the numbers, and the numbers they choose. The croupier then puts a brass bowl. When all is ready, he begins drawing out these colored chips, one at a time, until the game is over. When the last lot is reached, the corresponding number on the board wins. That is, if there are three coins left, the number three wins, and the others lose. The game has been exactly even, and there are none left. The winners get three times their stakes, and the house gets a commission of 10 per cent.

On the simple and primitive game, the players become wildly enthusiastic, and great sums are won and lost. The play becomes especially fast and furious on Sunday, when the throngs of Chinese gamblers come from Hongkong to spend the day about the tables.

How Fish Live in Water

It seems that nature decided that fishes should live in water and human beings should live on land, and therefore fishes are provided with gills, and human beings are provided with lungs through which to breathe. Now the great difference between gills and lungs is that gills can breathe the oxygen found in water and they cannot breathe the oxygen which is found in air. Without oxygen neither man nor beast can live. So the fish with his gills formed by nature to take from water the life-giving gas, oxygen, can live under water. Creatures who breathe through lungs—human beings and the great majority of the animals—can live only on land where their lungs get plenty of the oxygen which is one of the many gases that make up air.

The Searchlight.

A folding wheelbarrow and a folding spade or shovel are two new inventions which will doubtless frequently be used together, although they were invented by different men. Both are designed for travelers and tourists to remove or to know known countries, and both will be valuable to geologists and other scientists upon expedition in which excavating is likely to be required. The folding wheelbarrow is a simple, light, and compact affair. It is made of a strong material, and is so constructed that it can be folded down to a space equivalent to the dimensions of the bottom in area and less than ten inches in height. The wheel, axle, and handles all come off and can be put together in a minute with no danger of coming apart. Its strength is such that it can be loaded to its full capacity to that of any other barrow upon the market. The spade, or shovel, is equally strong and dependable. The blade folds double and the handle folds. "What a great find," exclaimed the amateur. "What a tool box of an auto for which purpose it is likely to come into great demand. Many an autoist has mud the tread of a spade which stuck in a muddy road and has often walked miles to procure one."

PRECEDENT

BY DR. FRANK GRANT.

PRECEDENT is solidified experience. In the realm of ideas it is canned goods. It is very useful when fresh ideas are not to be had.

There are advantages in doing things just because they always have been done. You know what will happen. When you do new things you do not know what will happen.

Success implies not only sound reasoning, but also the variable factor of how a thing will work, which is found out only by trying it.

Hence, the surest road to success is to use a precedent, the precedent of past success. Just how much of each you will require is a matter for your judgment, and for judgment there is no substitute.

To go entirely by precedent you become a muck-brook. You are safe, as a setting hen or a living bee is safe. Each succeeding generation acts the same way. There is a level of efficiency, but not progress.

Boards, trustees, and institutions lay great stress upon precedent, as they fear responsibility. To do as our predecessors did shifts the burden of blame a bit from our shoulders.

The precedent is the haven of refuge for them that fear to decide. Good law, however, follows precedent, on the general theory that experience is more just than individual decision.

THE MODERN SPORT OF ARCHERY

BY FREDERICK J. HARKIN

THE THIRTY-SEVENTH annual meet of the National Archery Association of the United States, in Chicago, this month brings to the fore again this sport, one of the oldest activities of man thus surviving as a popular amusement.

"So long as the new moon returns in heaven a bent, beautiful bow, so long will the good archer be kept busy. A good bow costs about $12, and the arrows are $10 a dozen. The target is a straw affair, painted in spots and circles, and representing a respectable athletic figure."

There was something of a revival of interest in archery in this country a few years ago. At that time the sport was mostly confined to women by experts in physical culture as one of the very best means of improving the pulse and figure, and there is no doubt but that it is an excellent exercise for that purpose. Since the days of the Amazons, there have been many skilled women archers, and there are a number of the sex making high scores in the National Archery association today.

Ernest Thompson Seton, the naturalist and originator of the Boy Scouts, also greatly promoted interest in archery among the boys by devising a game in which the target was placed upon a tree, and the boys were to shoot at it from a distance. This was hidden in the woods, hunted for and shot by the boy archers. Although the sport has been greatly stimulated in these ways, it seems still to remain a diversion of the few.

The first weapon of primitive man in almost every part of the world was the bow and arrow. It is the greatest use during the fourteenth century when Robin Hood and his bowmen ruled in Sherwood forest. It was the English long-bowmen who won for their country the decisive battles of Crecy and Poitiers against the French. The armored French knights hurled themselves in vain against the long lines of English bowmen, who shot their arrows into the air as they came, and then, when the knights were close, often entering the eye-holes. This was one of the first demonstrations of the superiority of infantry over cavalry. During the fifteenth century the long-bow seems to have been the decisive factor in many battles. Then began a decline of its dominance, hastened by the introduction of gunpowder.

So deep a hold had archery in the national life and story of Britain, however, that the government sought in every way to encourage its practice. Archery associations were formed and medals were held. There were affairs of great splendor and social importance. Silken canopies were erected on the fields, and the archers strolled about in elaborate and costly costumes. The shooting, however, became subordinated to the social phase of the amusement, with the result that it rapidly declined.

Later a revival took place, and the sport was much more scientifically practiced, and has enjoyed an uninterrupted popularity in England to this day. It first came to the United States in 1825, when an archery club was formed in Philadelphia, and remained active for many years. Meantime, a number of small clubs had been organized in various parts of the United States, but especially in the west and middle west. In 1875, these were gathered together under the name of the National Archery Association of the United States, which has since been supported and systematized at the sport ever since.

The most last year was held at Haverford, Pennsylvania, and that the year before in Boston. Chicago, however, has always been the center of American archery interests, and the return of the annual meet to that city will doubtless insure an unusual success.

QUIPS AND QUIDDITIES

A young student at college in want of $25 wrote to his uncle as follows:

"Dear Uncle: If you could see how I blush for shame I am writing, you would pity me. Do you know why? Because I have to ask you for a few dollars and do not know how to express myself. It is impossible for me to tell you. I prefer to die. You will be merciful and give me what I ask for. Believe me, my dearest uncle, your most obedient and affectionate nephew."

"P. S.—Overcome with shame for what I have written, I have been running after the messenger in order to take the letter from him, but I cannot catch him. Heaven grant that something may happen to stop him, or that this letter may get lost."

The uncle was naturally touched, but was equal to the emergency. He replied as follows:

"My Dear Jack: Console yourself and blush no more. Providence prays. The messenger lost your letter. Your affectionate uncle."

During a discussion of the fitness of things in general some one asked: "If a young man takes his best girl to the grand opera, spends $8 on a supper after the performance, and then takes her home in a taxicab, should he kiss her good night?"

An old bachelor who grew old "rather than a single" said: "It seems to me he has done enough for her."

Charles and Nancy had quarreled. After their supper mother tried to re-establish friendly relations. She told them of the Bible verse, "Let not the sun go down upon your wrath."

"Now, Charlie," she pleaded, "are you going to let the sun go down on your wrath?"

Charles quivered a little. Then:

"Well, how can I tell?"

A happy couple were on their way to Scotland. They had to change trains at Carlisle, and an obliging porter, while struggling with the luggage, noticed that the young lady's hair was dotted with rice. He approached the young man and, pulling a folded paper from his pocket, said:

"A present for you, sir, with the company's compliments."

"Indeed," said the traveler, "what is it?"

"A railway map, sir."

"Oh, thank you, but what are these marks in blue pencil?"

"That's right, Miss Mary," was the rejoinder of the porter. "Most every letter which is sent to Scotland off by a train has three eggs a week on an average."

Attorney Says One Council Can't Bind Action of Another Council

The constitutionality of the city ordinance fixing five year periods for the adoption of text books for the public schools was attacked Tuesday morning before Judge Pendleton, of the Fulton superior court, in the litigation growing out of the adoption by the board of education of the Tarr and McMurray geography, which has been in use for five years. The point was raised by Charles T. Hopkins, representing the McMillan company, publishers of the Tarr and McMurray text books. Attorneys representing the champions of the Frye geography objected to allowing the McMillan company to intervene and be made party to the litigation. But Judge Pendleton overruled this objection. The city council could take no action to bind a council not yet elected; in other words, that a city ordinance requiring the use of the same text books for five-year periods might be repealed by another council the year following its adoption, and that any attempt of one council to bind another was null and void.

Some weeks ago the board of education voted to replace the Frye geography, which has been in use for five years, by the Tarr and McMurray geography. The board of education, however, has been made party to the litigation. But Judge Pendleton overruled this objection. The city council could take no action to bind a council not yet elected; in other words, that a city ordinance requiring the use of the same text books for five-year periods might be repealed by another council the year following its adoption, and that any attempt of one council to bind another was null and void.

Mr. Knight Takes Exception to Remarks on His Classical Education

Representative Spencer R. Atkinson, of Fulton county, and Representative John Knight, of Berrien county, almost came to blows in the house Monday afternoon over an argument which grew out of Judge Atkinson's reference to Mr. Knight's education.

When the house convened at 3 o'clock on the subject of the bill prohibiting the paralleling of the Western and Atlantic railroads in his remarks he referred to the cavern in the market place at Rome and the sacrifice the Roman people made to have it filled.

Mr. Knight interrupted him on a point of order, declaring that the question before the house was not the dismantling of Rome, but legislation to prevent the paralleling of the W. & A. railroad.

"I didn't expect a gentleman who was turned out of Dalhousie to be making a classical allusion," remarked Judge Atkinson. He was understood to refer to a statement by Mr. Knight last week, when the appropriation for the North Georgia Agricultural college at Dalhousie was under consideration. Mr. Knight was understood to say at that time that he attended school at Dalhousie and was one of the products turned out by that college.

WAREHOUSE BILL NOT

LOST, SAY ADVOCATES

Adams' Bill Will Come Up Again Tuesday in Amended Form

Although the Adams' warehouse bill was tabled by the substitute Monday afternoon by the senate, the fight for the bill is not over yet, as Senator Adams said the bill, in amended form, would come up again Tuesday.

The bill was tabled Monday morning, taken from the table Monday afternoon at 12:30, and was tabled again at the afternoon session at 3:30 o'clock. Senator Adams said the bill, in amended form, would come up again Tuesday.

Senator Turner, of the Twenty-fifth, was one of the leaders in the fight for the bill. Senator Moon, of the Thirty-eighth, led the opposition, stating that warehouses could be adequately bonded under existing laws, and that the proposed Adams measure was superfluous legislation.

When the house convened at 3 o'clock on the subject of the bill prohibiting the paralleling of the Western and Atlantic railroads in his remarks he referred to the cavern in the market place at Rome and the sacrifice the Roman people made to have it filled.

Mr. Knight interrupted him on a point of order, declaring that the question before the house was not the dismantling of Rome, but legislation to prevent the paralleling of the W. & A. railroad.

"I didn't expect a gentleman who was turned out of Dalhousie to be making a classical allusion," remarked Judge Atkinson. He was understood to refer to a statement by Mr. Knight last week, when the appropriation for the North Georgia Agricultural college at Dalhousie was under consideration. Mr. Knight was understood to say at that time that he attended school at Dalhousie and was one of the products turned out by that college.

That is, "falsified"—I was not expelled from school," the gentleman from Berrien replied to Judge Atkinson's remark.

"Why you stated to the house the other day you were turned out of Dalhousie," said Judge Atkinson.

"I made no such statement," declared Mr. Knight.

Judge Atkinson laughed and turned again to his speech which he finished in about five minutes.

When he concluded and sat down, Mr. Knight walked over to his desk and began a discussion as to exactly what each meant by his words. Soon they grew excited and when Judge Atkinson stood up and started toward Mr. Knight, several members intervened and grasped the two gentlemen.

The sergeant-at-arms was called by the speaker, but Mr. Knight was led down the aisle by several friends and returned his seat.

Judge Atkinson then started to the house, but he had not nearly as much to say as he had intended to say. Mr. Knight was expelled from school, but that Mr. Knight was a "finished product" of Dalhousie.

The infection which he put on the two words caused considerable laughter.

Mr. Knight expressed himself as satisfied with Judge Atkinson's explanation, and the incident was closed. Representative Walter P. Andrews, of Fulton county, took the floor to speak on a substitute measure prohibiting the paralleling of the W. & A. road.

TUBERCULOSIS IS TOPIC

OF DR. C. C. AVEN

Continuing his series of health lectures and stereoscopic pictures, the Atlanta Anti-Tuberculosis and Visiting Nurses' association had one of the most enthusiastic and gratifying meetings of the whole course Monday night at the Fulton and Cotton Mills. It was held out of doors on the playground across the street from the Wesley House, and there were 1,500 or more people present.

Dr. C. C. Aven, in charge of the clinics at the Southern Medical colleges, spoke on the subject of tuberculosis.

The meetings will be continued at the same location Tuesday night and Wednesday night, beginning at 7:30 o'clock. Tuesday night Dr. J. Wade Conklin will lecture.

Topics of Interest

Switzerland besides preserving its political neutrality during the present international situation is also doing its utmost to preserve the artistic neutrality for the European continent. It has become a veritable place of refuge for artists, musicians and others, who are endeavoring to continue their work despite the raging of battles about them.

Switzerland might justly then be termed the carrier of European culture throughout the war. The latest report to John Brown, business controller of the Metropolitan Opera, brings the news that the various members of the Serge de Diaghilev Imperial Ballet are already gathered in the beautiful little town of Lausanne, and are there rehearsing under the leadership of the great director, Diaghilev himself, preparatory to starting for America next fall.

Pavlova's Impressions of Moving Pictures. Five reels of the massive Pavlova film spectacle, "Fennella" or "The Dumb Girl of Portici," have been completed in the temporary studio which the Universal Film corporation erected in Chicago adjoining the big auditorium where the Russian dancer has been appearing since she before attracted in the Windy city.

Pavlova never could understand why the never ending Chicago rain should interfere with her film work and she has always presented herself at the studio, to her own surprise, in her photographs which have reached New York testify to Pavlova's decision when, on account of the rain, rehearsals were called off. "Can't we do something?" she would say, and she would be told that she was not to move.

"Oh, now I understand," said Pavlova. "I thought a 'still' was something entirely different. I have seen not a few 'stills' in my day. The kind that would hardly make good photographs." Director Smalley assured Madame that no such "stills" are tolerated in Plianton.

Bernhardt Entertained in America. Following the run of "The Volleys of" at the Metropolitan.

Women's Suits for Fall

Are Very Tempting

Their prettiness of style, fabric and trimming has tempted many women already to choose from them.

Those who are going to the Panama Exposition, or going East, even women who are staying at home and who have grown tired of summer clothes, are buying Fall Suits.

No reason for waiting: There are styles a-plenty to select from, and prices are no higher than they will be later.

Many New Suit Features

The coats are a new length, and though some are very straight and box-like, still they are also ripply and full if you wish. And there are new skirt features, too. The tailoring in this season's Suits is as distinctive as the styles.

Buttons are brought into lavish use. They follow the seams in back, front and sleeves, sometimes as many as fifteen or eighteen in a row.

The Suit Illustrated, $25

Note the smart lines. It is one of the best models for Fall. Plain tailored, silk-braid bound, button trimmed, of fine gabardine, in African brown, bottle green, navy and black. A Suit of very high order for so moderate a price—$25.

At $35—Particularly charming Suits of fine wool Bedford cord with effective trimming touches of velvet, buttons and white broadcloth; smart green-and-white silk lining.

At $45—Extremely smart Suits of fine white cord, with combined trimmings of fur, velvet and buttons; the colors are: navy, brown and mouse gray.

At $50—Elegant Suits in a new Russian model with ripple flare coat, trimmed with seal—the material is very fine, wide-wale wool Bedford cord, in the new African brown, bottle green and navy.

Wooltex Suits—Some very smart early Fall models are here, beautifully tailored, of pretty wool fabrics in mixtures; button trimmed, and priced at $25.

Higher Priced Suits

If a Suit is wanted for dressy wear, for general use or for traveling, the present display here affords just such as one would like to possess. All the Fall styles and fabrics and colors are fully represented, and the prices meet every need.

High-class Suits, in charming variety, range from $40 to $65. We want to show you the entire display.

Doctors Recommend Spaghetti

Of spaghetti and its allied products, Dr. Hutchison, the famous dietitian, says that they are absorbed almost in their entirety. Their rich gluten goes to make brawn and tissue. And Faust Spaghetti is so easy to digest. Its energy value, compared with meat, is in the ratio of 100 to 60; therefore it is ideal food for hard workers and children. Write for free recipe book.
